		In a literate society, questions of writing are questions of justice: the ways different people and groups of people have learned to write determine whether and how their voices are heard in various public spheres. This course focuses a critical lens on the teaching of writing, in theory and practice, in schools, universities, tutoring spaces, workplaces, and communities. Students will draw on critical, sociocultural, and social justice lenses to explore research-based approaches to teaching and assessing writing. They will explore their own experiences and identities as writers, consider the myriad ways in which writing is taught and why, engage in narrative writing, and

In recent years, data became one of the most valuable and contested commodities in the world. In this class, we will explore the rise of data as a cultural and economic source of power. We will question the objectivity of data and learn how political movements have used subjective and interpersonal data to advance their goals. Lastly, we will interrogate current data applications and ask how we can use data justly.

Multi-Designated Courses
There are limited number of instances in the Schedule of Courses in which classes fall into two unique categories: (1) Within Subject -- classes with multi-level course designations (eg. ANTH 323/423) and (2) Cross Subject - classes which have multiple designations but the same course content (eg. ARCH 351/ENV 351). These classes are viewed by the Colleges as "class equivalents" and students are only permitted to take one of the equivalents for credit toward their degree. Students should also be aware that for the within subject classes in category (1) there will be students that are taking the course at different levels and this will include differences in assignments, etc.
